

THE FALL OF JUDKINS

The Cursed
House Saibot

"A first-round pick cursed before his first carry..."

Let it be known across the seven leagues—the gods are cruel, and fate laughs hardest at the bold.

For Saibot of the Iron Roster, it began with hope. He saw the spark. The bloodlines. The footsteps of a warrior born. He took Quinshon of Judkins—once the golden stallion of Oxford, now sworn to the crimson banners of Cleveland—and named him heir to the RB2 slot.

But little did he know... this was not a prince. This was a plague.

No sooner had the ink dried on the rookie draft scrolls than chaos struck. Judkins, once hailed as a prodigy of speed and purpose, was dragged from his path—not by dragons or defenders, but by his own damn foolishness.

A midnight quarrel. A clenched fist. A bruised jaw.

A career that had just begun—now swaying on the gallows of consequence.

What say you now, Saibot? You drafted a dagger into your own backfield. A first-round pick cursed before his first carry.

There are no redrafts in Dynasty. No "undo" spell in the realm of keepers. Only the cold, bitter march of time.

And yet... is this the end? Or merely the exile before redemption? Will Judkins rise again like Jon Snow from the crypts—or vanish like Viserys beneath golden ruin?

The realm watches.
The league whispers.
And Saibot... mourns.

MORE BELOW

Najee Harris Recovering from Fourth of July Mishap

TRADE ALERT: Quitmeyer Acquires Breece Hall from Cgonzo33 in Pickens + Picks Deal

Per sources, The Clippers (Cgonzo33) sends Breece Hall to Amon-Ra Doggin' (quitmeyer) in exchange for George Pickens and 2 future 2nds.

Trade Grades From Our Expert Analyst:

Quitmeyer: B+

Quitmeyer needed a running back badly and is making a high-stakes move to land Breece Hall. While Hall's upside is undeniable—he was the second-ranked RB just a year ago—there are risks involved. He's suffered an ACL injury (2022) and currently plays for the struggling Jets offense, which limits his production and upside in 2025. That said, Hall's youth and talent mean he could easily bounce back, especially if he moves to a better situation next season. Giving up two second-round picks hurts, especially for a manager already thin on draft capital. This is a classic high-risk, high-reward bet for Quitmeyer: secure a potential top-tier RB now, but accept the uncertainty around health and team context. If Hall returns to form, this could transform Quitmeyer's roster into a true contender.

Cgonzo33: A-

Cgonzo33 plays it smart by acquiring George Pickens—a dynamic but polarizing young WR who now finds himself in a prime spot as a newly minted Dallas Cowboy. After an up-and-down start to his career in Pittsburgh, Pickens now gets a fresh start catching passes from Dak Prescott in a high-powered offense. The upside is there for a full breakout, even if the ride has been bumpy. Add in two second-round picks and Cgonzo33 walks away with flexibility, future capital, and a high-ceiling wideout in a better situation.

NAJEE HARRIS BLOWS HIS EYE OUT

I mean... I just... WHAT?!

Can someone explain to me—like I'm five—how a grown man, a professional athlete, a multi-million dollar NFL running back, manages to blow out his own EYE at a Fourth of July cookout? What even was the plan, Najee? Hold the Roman candle with your face??

This wasn't "oops, a little firework burn on the wrist."

This was BOOM—and the next thing you know, he's looking like a half-blind pirate on injured reserve. Are you kidding me?

And just when you thought his vision couldn't get any worse.

Brother couldn't see the hole when he had two eyes. Now? He's about to run straight into the back of his own guard like a confused warhorse in a fog. Expect the Chargers' O-line to start wearing hazard vests in training camp.

And guess what? While Najee's out here playing Revolutionary War reenactments with live ordnance, Omarion Hampton strolls into Chargers camp like he's walking through the gates of Valhalla. Fresh legs. Rookie hunger. Two eyes. Two! That's double what Najee's working with.

And just like that—poof. Not just his retina. Not just his dignity.

His job. Gone. Vaporized.

From starter to sidelined. From bellcow to bench fodder. All because he wanted to "light up the sky" and ended up lighting up his orbital socket.

Fields Flipped, Love Lands New Home

Per sources, The Dragons (thedragon) sends Jordan Love to Amon-Ra Doggin' (quitmeyer) in exchange for Justin Fields, a 2026 3rd, and a 2027 1st.

Trade Grades From Our Expert Analyst:

Quitmeyer: B

This move is all about stability and leadership at the QB position. Love is entrenched as the franchise quarterback for the Green Bay Packers, fresh off a season where he looked the part. Love yet isn't elite, but he was solid, showing enough poise and production to earn the Packers' full confidence going forward. Acquiring the better QB in the deal is a plus, but it came at a cost. The loss of a 2027 first-round pick is a real blow, especially for a team whose long-term future feels murky. Aging stars, limited draft capital, and uncertain depth mean Quitmeyer is putting full faith in Jordan Love.

Worth noting: Quitmeyer now rosters Jordan Love, Kyler Murray, and Trevor Lawrence. With three starting-caliber QBs, a follow-up deal could be coming soon as he looks to flip depth into help elsewhere.

thedragon: B

thedragon makes a classic upside swing here, grabbing Justin Fields—a player with the tools to be one of the best fantasy QBs or be out of the league in two years. It's a wide range of outcomes, but at this price, it's a gamble worth considering. What really sweetens the deal is the 2027 first-round pick, which comes from a team with an uncertain future and aging roster. In what's already being talked about as a loaded draft class, that pick could turn into a franchise cornerstone.

All in all, don't mind the deal for thedragon—a calculated upside play with potential long-term payoff.

PSYCHOPATH DYNASTY WIN TOTAL LINES

COLBY	10.5 0/U
GABE	10.5 0/U
ETHAN	8.5 0/U
MATT	8.5 0/U
CHRIS	8.5 0/U
ANDY	7.5 0/U
RICHARD	7.5 0/U
TIM	7.5 0/U
OMAR	5.5 0/U
SEBASTIAN	4.5 0/U
JOEY	4.5 0/U
JACKSON	2.5 0/U

Local Oddsmakers Release 2025 Win Totals

In a move sure to spark heated debates at the local watering hole (and in league group chats), oddsmakers have officially released the 2025 win totals for teams across the Psychopath Dynasty League. With the draft dust settled and offseason trades still echoing, sportsbooks are putting their money where the projections are.

Topping the board are Colby and Gabe, both opening at a lofty 10.5 wins, signaling the league views them as the class of the field heading into the new campaign. Colby's young squad returns ready to build upon a promising season, while Gabe's hyper-efficient roster construction and quarterback room continue to draw sharp praise.

Right behind them is a tight middle tier of contenders – Matt, Ethan, and Chris – each coming in at 8.5 wins. These teams have the rosters to make noise, but questions of star power and depth could swing things in either direction.

Meanwhile, Andy, Tim, and Richard find themselves in prove-it territory at 7.5 wins. Each of them could go either way, but the oddsmakers are waiting to see it on the field before fully buying in.

At the bottom of the board, it's a rebuilding year for Omar, Joey, and Sebastian, clocking in at 5.5 and 4.5 wins respectively, while Jackson rounds things out with a modest 2.5 win total. He's hoping for growth from Caleb Williams, but Vegas isn't sold—yet.

*Place your bets here: (reg. season is 14 gms)
<https://docs.google.com/forms/d/e/1FAIpQLSdJleRaf5HkoXh5fw4AYipxEhSuCm0-8NlseCkr6vfjCbQ1mQ/viewform?usp=dialog>*

Snap Count Secrets: What to Watch During Training Camp and Preseason

Watch Carefully:

These are high-priority battles or injury returns with fantasy-changing potential

Keep an Eye On:

Players with roles or usage could quietly shift in an impactfully positive or negative way

Don't Blink:

Look for these guys to sneakily carve out a role. Potential fantasy starters one day

Ngo Man's Land -

Watch Carefully: Colston Loveland

The highly touted rookie, Colston Loveland, is pencilled in as the Day 1 starter for Ngo Man's Land. Coming off a shoulder surgery, Loveland has been unable to participate in contact drills this offseason. Loveland needs to show he's fully healthy and provide encouraging signs heading into the season if Ngo Man's Land is to count on him this season.

Keep an Eye On: Jaylen Wright (I've given up on Kendre Miller)

Coming off an up-and-down rookie year with limited touches, Wright enters his sophomore campaign with something to prove. He's flashed in workouts, earned praise from the team—and even Tyreek Hill says to watch out. With solid preseason reps, he could carve out a meaningful role in both fantasy and real life.

Don't Blink: DJ Giddens

In a Colts backfield desperate for talent outside of JT, Giddens has the opportunity to earn a meaningful role.

First, Giddens will have to prove himself as a pass-catcher, an area in which Jonathan Taylor can struggle. If Giddens can earn consistent playing time on third downs, that would be a successful season. With Taylor getting older and carries stacking up, Giddens has undeniable upside both now and in the future.

Nabers in Paris - Watch Carefully: D'Andre Swift's Job

Once viewed as an elite RB talent, Swift now finds himself in a prove-it year under Ben Johnson's watch. Will the offensive guru unlock him—or phase him out?

How he's handled this preseason could reveal everything: Is he the clear starter, or just another guy fighting for touches? Keep an eye on his usage, especially if he's resting while others play. A start-able Swift would go a long way for a Nabers in Paris team lacking depth.

Keep an Eye On: Metcalf and Rodgers Chemistry

If the Steelers' offense clicks and fires on all cylinders, DK Metcalf could ride that wave into fantasy stardom. Rodgers and Metcalf have potential chemistry that, if fully realized, can turn DK into a fantasy stud this season. Watch closely for their connection developing early—this could be the X-factor in Nabers in Paris's season.

Don't Blink: Will Levis

What if I told you Nabers in Paris might be hiding an MVP... on the bench? Yep, that Will Levis.

Armed with a rocket arm, a bottle of mayo, and more swagger than passing yards—don't be surprised if he forces his way into the lineup (for an XFL team) by next year.

The Clippers -

Watch Carefully: Isiah Pacheco, Javonte Williams, Travis Etienne, JK Dobbins

Could these names be any more similar? This Clippers squad is packed with middling guys who somehow all have a chance to revive their careers. Pacheco, Williams, Etienne, and Dobbins all need to show some burst and win their starting jobs.

If a few of these guys work out, The Clippers' future is looking bright. How these battles shake out might just decide if the Clippers can quickly retool or fade quietly.

Keep an Eye On: Quarterback Situations

*Wait Why!? The Clippers have Patrick Mahomes, Justin Herbert, and Dak Prescott (great trade). Why? Olave in New Orleans needs a steady signal-caller to maximize his potential (Shough!?!?)
Pittman in Indianapolis is waiting on consistency at the QB spot (Richardson!?!?)
Jedrick in Cleveland can't thrive without a dependable passer. (Legendary)
And Pickens needs to build a strong connection with Dak Prescott.
Watch these quarterback situations closely – they could make or break the fantasy value of these Clippers targets.*

Keep an Eye On: Emeka Egbuka

A dependable wide receiver out of Ohio State and a former 5-star recruit, Egbuka has been on the map for a long time.

I believe he'll make an impact from Week 1. His connection with Baker is a match made in heaven, and his skill set draws obvious comparisons to Chris Godwin.

With plenty of training camp hype surrounding him,

Egbuka is poised to carve out a significant role early.

Don't Blink: Jaydon Blue

Jaydon Blue is an electrifying rookie who could be a future star...

or out of the league in a year. If Javonte doesn't work out, the Clippers need Blue to hit sooner than expected.

But early camp whispers about his work ethic raise red flags.

He'll need to flash big plays in the preseason to reassure both coaches and fantasy managers that he's for real.

Do we think Javonte and Blue can hold off

Phil Mafah?

Amon-Ra Doggin' -

Watch Carefully: Chris Godwin and Mark Andrews

Two veterans that must prove they still got it. Godwin was dominant last season before an ankle injury knocked him out.

Watch his training camp participation and practice availability closely—can he hold off rookie Emeka Egbuka? Meanwhile, Mark Andrews faces pressure from Isaiah Likely. These are two key pieces for Quitmeyer's squad.

If they hold their ground, Amon-Ra Doggin' remains a contender.

If not... it could get shaky.

Keep an Eye On: Tyler Shough vs Spencer Rattler, Trevor Lawrence Leap?

An older rookie with a real shot to win the starting job,

Tyler Shough could be the unexpected answer in New Orleans.

No offense to Rattler, but I think Shough should win this job with ease. Amon-Ra' Doggin's move to get Shough could pay dividends FAST. If he secures the role, he brings both stability to the offense and sneaky fantasy upside. Keep a close eye on his preseason reps—he might just become a valuable asset sooner than expected.

No more excuses for Trevor Lawrence –

It's time for the former No. 1 pick to take the leap in year 5.

With Liam Coen designing the offense and dynamic weapons like Brian Thomas Jr.

and Travis Hunter, Lawrence needs to turn promise into production.

If he can't produce now, with this setup, he never will.

Don't Blink: Bhayshul Tuten (and Phil Mafah)

Bhayshul Tuten enters camp with Bucky Irving-like potential in a Liam Coen offense built to feature versatile backs. But potential only takes you so far—

Tuten needs to hold onto the ball and show soft hands in the passing game.

The upside is real, but the margin for error is thin. Amon-Ra' Doggin will want to see its second round pick dazzle in his preseason opportunities.

Enter Phil Mafah. After a highly productive college career at Syracuse, Mafah arrives NFL-ready and hungry. He runs with POWER.

If he showcases even one of his bruising power runs

—he could take control of the Cowboys' backfield.

Burrowed Time - Watch Carefully: Ricky Pearsall

After an injury-shortened rookie season, Ricky Pearsall is primed for a sophomore leap. There's a wide-open path to snaps and targets in this offense, and he has the route-running chops to take full advantage. If he seizes the opportunity early in camp, Pearsall could go from shaky starter to cornerstone for Burrowed Time.

Keep an Eye On: Manager Matt's Moves

Matt's team is built to win now—but he may still need a couple more starting pieces to fill out his lineup and become a true contender. He's already made a savvy move for Jared Goff, but all eyes should be on what he does next with his stash of draft picks. With the right trades, Matt could turn his roster from strong to scary in a hurry.

Don't Blink: Jacory Croskey-Merritt

Don't be fooled—Brian Robinson is not a good running back. If Croskey-Merritt impresses in camp, things could get real interesting, real fast. With 4.45 speed and fresh legs, Merritt brings burst and big-play potential that Robinson just doesn't. Keep an eye on preseason usage—this backfield might be more open than it looks.

Motor City-

Watch Carefully: J.J. McCarthy (and Cam Ward)

The long-awaited debut is here. JJ. McCarthy enters camp determined to prove he's not just the Vikings' QB of the future—but Motor City's franchise cornerstone. All eyes will be on his chemistry with a talented pass-catching group led by Justin Jefferson.

Can he command the offense, push the ball downfield, and look the part of a Day 1 starter?

The reps he gets—and how he performs in them—could shape both the Vikings' and Motor City's trajectory.

Everyone will be watching Cam Ward's electric debut.

The rookie brings mobility, arm talent, and a fearless play style that made him the number 1 overall pick. Motor City has a lot to look forward to in this upcoming season.

Keep an Eye On: Tyreek Hill

Can Tyreek Hill regain elite form and reestablish himself as a true superstar with Tua? If he clicks early and returns to his game-breaking ways, he becomes not just a weekly difference-maker—but a high-leverage trade chip for Motor City.

For a team looking to build upon its promising young core, a Tyreek Hill resurgence would go a long way for Motor City.

Keep an Eye On: Tyler Warren

A big-bodied tight end who was used all over the field at Penn State, Tyler Warren brings versatility, toughness, and serious run-after-catch ability. He's physical, athletic, and—dare we say—might be a better quarterback than Anthony Richardson. If the Colts get creative, Warren has real potential to become a touchdown machine in this offense.

Don't Blink: Wan'Dale Robinson

Is Wan'Dale Robinson 5'8" or 6'4" when the lights come on?

Depends who you ask. The Giants offense might be a disaster, but Wan'Dale is out there slicing zones like prime Welker with ankle-breaking agility and just enough irrational confidence.

If he somehow survives the chaos and earns consistent targets,

Motor City might have accidentally stumbled into a PPR cheat code.

Boliever.-

Watch Carefully: Jalen Royals

With a Rashee Rice suspension looming, opportunity knocks.

Jalen Royals enters camp with a similar play style and college profile—and the Chiefs just might need someone to step up fast.

If Royals shows he's ready with a strong camp and preseason, he could force his way into meaningful snaps and give Boliever. a promising young WR.

Keep an Eye On: Geno Smith

Sneakily finishing as QB13 last season, Geno Smith might not be flashy—but he gets the job done. Now, with a potentially high-powered offense

featuring Ashton Jeanty and Brock Bowers,

Geno could remain a steady producer.

If things click, he might return solid value for a rebuilding Boliever. squad—and maybe even net a draft pick down the line. I believe that Geno is a good QB3/QB2 for contenders.

Don't Blink: Kyle Monangai

Built like a bowling ball and runs like one too—Kyle Monangai brings that same reckless, unhinged energy Rutgers fans loved and defenders feared. Think Isiah Pacheco and Marshawn Lynch

(yes, that type of chaos). If he gets even a sliver of opportunity,

Monangai could blast his way into a role and leave broken tackles—and stunned fantasy managers—in his wake.

The Wintergreens- Watch Carefully: Rashee Rice

"119 MPH and Rising:

*Hey Upper East Sideline,
We've got breaking tea—and it's burning hotter than a turf toe in August.*

Rashee "Criminally Fast" Rice isn't just torching DBs at Chiefs camp

—he's out here setting land speed records off the field, too. 119 MPH?

In a Lamborghini?? In Dallas traffic?? What was he racing—lightning?

Yes, darlings, you heard it right: Rashee Rice allegedly whipped his Lambo like it was a damn horse, caused a six-car crash, and then had the audacity to flee the scene.

Real GTA: Arrowhead Edition vibes. Now he's officially a convicted felon with 30 days of jail time and five years probation.

He went from WR1 to Warrant Receiver One in under six seconds.

But here's the twist: he's still lighting up camp. The Chiefs are letting him cook while the NFL decides how long to sit him. (Insiders say 4–6 games. But in Dynasty? That's an eternity.)

And his clone lurking in the background like a patient assassin?

Jalen Royals. Fast. Fresh. Prepared. Managers are foaming at the mouth for this kid to slide into Rashee's vacated alpha throne. I didn't even mention Xavier Worthy. Let's face it—Rice may be fast, but Worthy? He's the future. And right now, the only thing slowing him down is a depth chart held together by court dates.

So buckle up, sweethearts.

Because Rashee may be speeding again—but this time, it's straight toward Dynasty irrelevance (probably not).

Watch Carefully: Cam Skattebo Vs Tyrone Tracy

Two backs. One role. Cam Skattebo brings bruising power and old-school grit—he'll run through your face and smile doing it.

Tyrone Tracy? Pure burst, converted receiver, and slippery in space.

This camp battle could decide who gets valuable third-down work (or more).

With contrasting styles and everything on the line, this might be one of the best position battles with real fantasy implications.

Grab popcorn.

Keep an Eye On: Treveyon Henderson

The talent has never been the question—

TreVeyon Henderson was electric at Ohio State when healthy.

But with lingering injury concerns and questions about workload, all eyes are on how many carries he can realistically handle.

Do the Patriots trust him to lead the backfield, or will Rhamondre Stevenson siphon off touches?

Keep a close watch on how the staff deploys him in camp—usage will tell us everything about his role and upside for both now and future seasons.

Don't Blink: Dylan Sampson

With the Judkins case hanging in the air and no contract in sight, the backfield suddenly cracked wide open.

All Dylan Sampson has to do?

Beat out Jerome Ford. Just like that, Sampson has gone from deep sleeper to potential starting running back. What a pick by the Wintergreens—stealthy, sharp, and possibly season-changing.

All in the blink of an eye. We said don't blink.

Amerikaz Most Wanted-

Watch Carefully: Matthew Golden, Jayden Reed, (and especially Quinshon Judkins)

The WR1 job in Green Bay? Wide open.

And AMK just happens to have a front-row seat—and a stake in both contenders. Jayden Reed has flashed serious playmaking ability, while Matthew Golden brings explosiveness and upside that can't be ignored. It's a tricky situation, but Amerikaz Most Wanted needs one of them to break out and seize control.

Two middling wide receivers won't cut it. AMK needs a star.

This could be the difference between wide receiver depth... and wide receiver despair.

Keep an Eye On: Tre Harris, Deebo Samuel, Calvin Ridley

While it's unlikely he overtakes Ladd McConkey,

Tre Harris is stepping into a Chargers offense that's quietly turning nuclear.

With Justin Herbert at the helm and a high-octane system in place,

Harris has a real shot to carve out a productive role.

The big body receiver can become exactly what Quentin Johnston was supposed to be. Slightly on the older side, he should be ready to go from day 1.

If he clicks early, don't be surprised if he turns into a sneaky fantasy starter by midseason.

With Terry McLaurin holding out, Deebo Samuel has a chance to revitalize his career.

He can do so alongside rookie QB Jayden Daniels, whose dual-threat ability could open up all kinds of YAC chaos for Deebo.

Meanwhile, Calvin Ridley is in Tennessee as the clear-cut WR1 and gets to pair with the cannon-armed Cam Ward.

If chemistry clicks, Ridley could sneak into the top 20 WRs.

This WR room could go from shaky to scary.

Don't Blink: Elic Ayomanor

We just mentioned Tennessee's wide receiver room...

and guess what? It's wide open. Enter Elic Ayomanor—

a Stanford product with the size, speed, and physical tools to turn heads.

Need a resume booster? He cooked Travis Hunter one-on-one.

If he flashes in camp, Ayomanor could go from slept on to starter in a hurry. Don't blink—seriously.

Piece of s team -

Watch Carefully: Keon Coleman and Xavier Legette

This team sinks or swims with these two.

Keon Coleman and Xavier Legette have the raw talent to become the foundation of the WR room for years—but they need to make that Year 2 leap.

Both flashed as rookies but battled inconsistency, disappearing just as often as they popped. If they level up, this roster has a pulse. If not?

It's back to the draft board.

Keep an Eye On: Drake Maye

It's a big year for Drake Maye.

He's had a full offseason to develop, the hype machine is running full speed, and everyone's already calling him the next franchise superstar.

But now it's time to prove it. Maye needs to show growth, better decision-making, and—most importantly—take care of the ball.

The talent is there. If he puts it all together, this isn't just a win for his NFL team—it's a franchise-altering moment for this fantasy squad.

A true breakout would give this team a locked-in QB1 for years, solving one of the hardest spots to fill in dynasty.

High stakes, high upside—just how we like it.

Don't Blink: Jayden Higgins (shoutout Kyle Williams)

This might not be a sleeper—

but Jayden Higgins has a real shot to win the WR2 role in Houston by season's end.

Lining up across from Nico Collins in a rising offense,

Higgins brings size, toughness, and big-play ability.

Christian Kirk? Please. He doesn't have anything on Higgins when it comes to upside. Don't be surprised if Higgins makes noise early and never gives the job back. Blink, and you'll miss the breakout.

Don't forget about Kyle Williams

Dazzling speed. Twitchy movements.

And if you squint hard enough after the catch—you might just see shades of early-career Odell.

His connection with Drake Maye will play an important part in this dynasty team's future success.

C -

Watch Carefully: Justin Fields

New team. New shot. Justin Fields is the only QB on this dynasty roster—and now it's time to prove he's here to stay.

The rushing upside is still off the charts and when he's on,

he's a fantasy cheat code. But it all comes down to this:

can he hold down the Jets job and stop them from drafting his replacement next spring?

Fields has the tools to be the one—now he just has to show it before it's too late.

Keep an Eye On: DJ Moore

A new Ben Johnson offense. A (hopefully) improved Caleb Williams.

And a golden opportunity for DJ Moore to remind everyone he's still that guy.

For a rebuilding squad, a strong season from Moore could mean a future first-round pick—if he plays up to his WR1 potential.

He must deliver. The value swing here is massive.

Don't Blink: Shedeur Sanders (shoutout LeQuint Allen)

*At this point, anyone can win the Browns' starting QB job—and Shedeur Sanders is officially on watch. With the situation wide open, every report out of camp and every preseason snap will be must-see material.
If Shedeur shows out and seizes the job?
That's a ginormous boost to this dynasty squad's future.
This could change everything in an instant.*

*We've talked about Bhayshul Tuten—but don't forget about the other rookie RB lurking in the shadows.
LeQuint Allen is a sneaky weapon: soft hands in the passing game, big enough to hold his own in pass protection,
and quietly carving out a role.
Third-down snaps could come sooner than expected.
He might already be earning trust.*

Ja'Tavion. - Watch Carefully: Tet McMillan

*The No. 2 overall pick is a franchise-defining swing—and Ja'Tavion needs it to hit. Tet McMillan turning into a top-10 WR would give the roster another cornerstone next to Brock Bowers.
But if he falters, it sets the rebuild back in a big way.
His connection with Bryce Young will be closely watched as he tries to cement himself as Carolina's WR1.*

Keep an Eye On: Caleb Williams and Luther Burden

*Caleb Williams must speed up his decision-making and get the ball out quicker to thrive in Ben Johnson's offense.
Luckily, he has former No. 1 ranked WR Luther Burden ready to make the most of every opportunity.
If they click early, this stack could be a future force for Ja'Tavion. In a crowded Bears offense, Caleb is the main watch, but Luther's YAC abilities should pop off the screen whenever he gets chances with the ball.*

Keep an Eye On: Anthony Richardson and Quentin Johnston

If these two reclamation projects show real signs of life, it could be a game-changer for this young roster.

Richardson's health and development hold QB1 upside, while Johnston—reportedly impressing in camp—still has the size and tools to break out.

Both entering Year 3, their emergence would give Ja'Tavion roster flexibility and momentum heading into a 2026 draft stockpile. If these two pan out, watch out for Ja'Tavion following the 2026 rookie draft.

Keep an Eye On: Sophomore Surges (Braelon Allen, Trey Benson, Jermaine Burton, Ja'Tavion Sanders)

This group of second-year players could take a leap—and reshape this roster in the process.

Braelon Allen needs to keep chipping away at Breece Hall's workload. He flashed in limited opportunities as a rookie and remains one of the youngest backs in the league.

Trey Benson might be my favorite of the group. James Conner is getting older, and the Cardinals may want to keep Conner fresh.

I think he's the most likely to earn a real role—and quickly.

Jermaine Burton seems to have recommitted to football. If he keeps his head down, he has a shot to lock in that WR3 spot in Cincinnati.

And Ja'Tavion Sanders? The path is clear. If his standout pass-catching ability translates, he could be a surprise TE contributor all year long.

Keep an Eye On: Elijah Arroyo

Arroyo's combination of precise route running and above-average speed fits well in the Seahawks' offensive scheme.

The team's decision to release Noah Fant signals a vote of confidence in Arroyo's potential role (or AJ Barner's).

If he can consistently separate and contribute in the passing game,

Arroyo could emerge as a reliable target and key piece in their offense.

Don't Blink: Jack Bech, Tory Horton, Arian Smith

*Haven't heard much about Jack Bech in practices yet, but in a Chip Kelly offense, he could carve out a major role as a power slot receiver.
With his big body and possession skills, Bech has the tools to become a first-down and touchdown machine.
Keep an eye on him—he might turn into a key weapon.*

*A productive college WR stepping into a proven Seahawks room, Horton offers versatility that could quickly make him stand out.
With Kupp and JSN occupying similar slot roles and questions lingering about how much Kupp has left in the tank, Horton's ability to make plays from the outside could translate from college.*

*Don't Blink. Literally. A track star with speed to burn, Arian Smith enters a wide-open Jets room where Malachi Corley looks like a bust.
This talented Georgia wide receiver is a fluid athlete who just needs to clean up his catching.
If he does, Smith could explode onto the scene fast—don't blink or you'll miss it.*

